T he Rule of the Major-Generals was a 15-month period of direct military government during Oliver Cromwell's Protectorate. The failure of the First Protectorate Parliament discouraged Cromwell from further attempts to co-operate with civilian politicians, and a series of Royalist conspiracies that culminated in Penruddock's Uprising in the spring of 1655 convinced him that stringent security measures should be enforced.

Rule of the Major-Generals - BCW Project

Durston attributes the failure of the major generals to their aim in establishing godly rule, which he regards as being impossible given the resources at their disposal, and their failure in this task is why the rule of the major generals collapsed. The failure of the major generals shifted Cromwell's outlook, and his opposition to the Decimation Tax showed that he no longer supported the rule of the major generals.
