From 1979 to 1997 Britain was a laboratory for experiments in local governance as the control and delivery of local services was switched from elected councils to appointed boards (quangos), private companies or self-management. This book is about four models of local governance: the traditional 'localist' model, the New Right's 'individual' model, the New Left's 'mobilisation' model, and government's own 'centralist' model. It tests them against public opinion as expressed in 2203 interviews with ordinary citizens, 788 with councillors, and 902 with members of appointed boards.

In this volume we present some of the papers that were delivered at FUR-82 - the First International Conference on Foundations of Utility and Risk Theory in Oslo, June 1982. The purpose of the conference was to provide a forum within which scientists could report on interesting applications of modern decision theory and exchange ideas about controversial issues in the foundations of the theory of choice under uncertainty. With that purpose in mind we have selected a mixture of applied and theoretical papers that we hope will appeal to a wide spectrum of readers from graduate students in social science departments and business schools to people involved in making hardheaded decisions in business and government. In an introductory article Ole Hagen gives an overview of various paradoxes in utility and risk theory and discusses these in the light of scientific methodology. He concludes the article by calling for joint efforts to provide decision makers with workable theories. Kenneth Arrow takes up the same issue on a broad basis in his paper where he discusses the implications of behavior under uncertainty for policy. In the theoretical papers the reader will find attempts at definitive Statements of the meaning of old concepts and suggestions for the adoption of new concepts. For instance, Maurice Allais discusses four different interpretations of the axioms of probability and explains the need for an empirical characterization of the concept of chance.

Presents an international symposium and incorporates a complete review in the area of essential fatty acids and infant nutrition. This book brings together the results of the exchange of views between clinicians and researchers in Europe and in the United States and Canada.
